Syrian Refugees are facing a protection and poverty crisis, exacerbated as a result of COVID-19. While poverty rates were already high, refugees have lost their livelihoods, are taking on debt and are increasingly unable to meet their basic needs including food, education, health and rent due to the impact of COVID-19.

The hardship facing communities has long been severe – and now is worsening. Unemployment and impoverishment are now accelerated by the impact of COVID-19. Vulnerable host community members including female-headed households are mostly working in the informal sector and are often missed by national safety nets.

Host countries confront unparalleled challenges yet retain their commitment to hosting refugees. After nearly a decade of hosting some of the world’s most vulnerable people, host governments are now hard hit by worsening economic conditions and mounting financial pressures, placing new and severe strains on government’s abilities to sustain services for all, risking social cohesion and threatening to rollback hard-won development gains.

WHAT IS THE CURRENT SITUATION?

WHAT CAN WE DO?

Ensure continued support for the 3RP. The funding situation is critical - over US$ 5 billion is required for the remainder of the year. Emergency cash assistance, protection, livelihoods, health and education are the key priorities. It is critical that the international community enables the 3RP to meet the additional needs generated by COVID-19, while ensuring that other critical programmes are not forced to scale back, which would have a devastating impact on an already fragile situation.

Provide extraordinary support for host governments and communities in these unprecedented times. While the international community has provided generous support since day one; enhanced bilateral and multilateral support is critical amidst the backdrop of COVID-19 to help restore development momentum and ensure continued asylum and protection for Syrian refugees.

Help secure durable solutions for Syrian refugees to bring an end to their plight. While many Syrian refugees will continue to require protection and asylum in host countries, they also need durable solutions to bring an end to years of protracted displacement, including a return to Syria for those who choose.
